You show a video in class. Your agent turns it into the Quizlet set, both Google Forms quizzes with the answer keys already set, and later a note on what the class missed. You never type a question again.

What it does for you

Your exact prompt, run to the letter. Twenty Quizlet items, twelve on content and eight on vocabulary. Twenty transcript questions and twenty study set questions, four choices each, right answers spread evenly, distractors pulled from the video. Grades 6 to 8, seventh grade reading level, transcript only. Then the part that used to take the hour:

- Quizlet, one click. An import file arrives with the pack. Paste it in and the set is built.
- Google Forms, already made. Both quizzes exist in your Google account as graded quizzes. One point each, every question required, answer key set. Post them to Classroom.
- It grades and tells you what to reteach. After the kids submit, your agent reads the results and writes you a short note: the class average, the questions most missed, and the idea behind each one.
- Three reading levels. On level, supported, and challenge versions of the same quiz, for the kids who need them.
- A bank that grows. Every video you have ever done, filed by subject. Next year it is already there.
